

Building healthier teams

The Empty Chair

At your next meeting, leave an imaginary chair at the table.

It belongs to the patient or family affected by the decision.

What would they ask?

What might they struggle to understand?

What matters to them that hasn't appeared in the papers, targets, or discussion?

You won't always know the answers. But remembering who's missing can change the questions you ask.